Make sure that your investigators understand and apply the principles of practice that secure true confessions, and avoid those behaviors that can result in coerced confessions

The Reid Technique: The Gold Standard for Interrogation Safeguards

Every court decision on confession admissibility underscores the behaviors that all investigators should follow to avoid possible false or coerced confessions:

The Reid Technique Principles of Practice

- Do not make any promises of leniency
- Do not deny the subject any of their rights
- Do not deny the subject the opportunity to satisfy their physical needs
- Exercise special caution when questioning socially immature juveniles or individuals with mental or psychological impairments
- Always treat the subject with dignity and respect
- Absent a life-saving circumstance, the investigator should conduct a non-accusatory interview before engaging in any interrogation
- Conduct an interrogation only when there is reasonable certitude that the suspect committed the offense under investigation or is withholding relevant information
- Withhold information about the details of the crime from the subject so that if the subject confesses, the disclosure of that information can be used to confirm the authenticity of the statement
- Electronically record the interview and interrogation

For decades, the Reid Technique Principles of Practice have set the standard for conducting proper investigative interviews and interrogations.

A 2026 review of all 50-state Supreme Court and Appellate decisions, including the District of Columbia, that referenced the Reid Technique in a decision found that no state labelled the Reid Technique as coercive, illegal, prohibited, or that it violated due process.

In our training courses, we teach that all investigators should

NEVER ENGAGE IN ANY OF THESE COERCIVE BEHAVIORS

- Physically abuse the subject
- Make threats to physically harm the subject
- Make threats of inevitable consequences
- Make promises of leniency
- Deny the subject any of their rights
- Deny the subject the chance to satisfy the physical needs
- Conduct excessively long interrogations
- Disclose details about the crime
- Fail to properly take into account the subject's mental limitations and/or psychological disabilities
- Fail to properly modify approaches with socially immature juveniles
- Fail to properly corroborate confession details
