ABOUT THE CLASS

This course is designed for proactive police officers seeking to expand their knowledge and effectiveness in criminal interdiction. The program is structured to benefit both rookie and experienced officers by providing a clear understanding of how Drug Trafficking Organizations (DTOs) operate and how officers can strategically position themselves for success during traffic stops.

Officers will learn a disciplined, methodical approach to locating, identifying, and seizing narcotics, illicit currency, and other forms of contraband. The course covers the legal framework for identifying vehicles involved in criminal activity, recognizing criminal indicators, conducting effective vehicle searches, and identifying advanced concealment methods commonly used by DTOs.

Instructor Konopka draws on real-world experience to address interdiction efforts conducted on interstates, highways, and rural roadways. Students will learn how to properly articulate reasonable suspicion and probable cause under the totality of the circumstances. The course also walks officers through building a complete interdiction case—from initial observation to enforcement action—by recognizing reactions to police presence, identifying deceptive behavior, understanding the role of drug mules, and effectively requesting consent during traffic stops.

Additional instruction includes the use of free and readily available investigative tools, proper articulation of observations made during traffic stops, and techniques for advancing an investigation beyond the initial stop when legally justified.

Instructor Konopka is actively enrolled in and pursuing a doctoral degree in Criminal Justice, ensuring the course content reflects both practical field experience and current legal and academic standards.
